

Courses for the Minor in International Studies

Only upper division courses (for the most part, 3000 level or higher) that focus on global issues and/or countries outside the United States from the 19th century to the present will count toward the Minor in International Studies. The course list below indicates which of the four broad content areas each course falls into. The content areas are:

1. International Politics and History (generally, courses in Political Science and/or History)
2. The Global Economy (generally, courses in Economics, Business, and/or Agricultural and Resource Economics)
3. Global Society and Culture (generally, courses in Sociology and Anthropology)
4. International Dimensions of the Arts and Humanities (generally, courses in Art, Art History, Literature, and/or Philosophy)

Courses listed in italics are not offered regularly. Courses marked with an asterisk might count toward the minor, depending on the content. Similarly, courses taken for credit in approved study abroad programs for which there is no UConn equivalent (i.e., courses with a “Foreign Studies” number higher than 3000) may also count toward the minor, if they meet the content requirements stated above. After reviewing the syllabus for an asterisked or study abroad course, the International Studies Advisor will determine whether it will count.

Please note: this is a working list of courses. New courses may have been added that do not appear on the list; some of the courses on the list may not be regularly taught. If you think you have taken a course that could count toward the minor in International Studies, you must review the syllabus for the course with the International Studies Advisor, Lauren Daniels (Lauren.Daniels@uconn.edu), who will decide whether it will count. With the approval of the International Studies Advisor, 3 credits of independent study and a 3-credit internship may be counted toward the minor in International Studies. Foreign Study and Special Topics courses that meet the criteria for International Studies courses may also be counted toward the minor.
